Chicken, the beloved friend of American families for generations, died this week. One of my first memories of chicken was purchasing it at my grandparents' house. We'd cut up a whole egg-laying hen into pieces and then they were tossed into a pot. The chicken sat steaming away as I diligently and proudly decorated a Velveeta-glazed taco shell with what I'd find when I cut into the meat. There was dark meat, bright meat and white meat. AD AD It was a perfectly executed taco, and chicken was a great accompaniment to that first taco experience. So, imagine my disappointment a couple of days ago when I found that grocery stores are now shipping out chicken that doesn't even resemble a chicken. The "chicken" that food companies put on shelves is a feathered automaton with no personality or true character of its own. Many of the "chicken" products that populate grocery store shelves are mechanically loaded with carbs and fat in and of themselves, with a modest amount of protein. Some of the products are even genetically modified, meaning that the bird that produced the product's DNA was altered in some way. AD No, "Chicken McNuggets" are not the new "Steak McNuggets." Today's chicken is not even close to what we were accustomed to in the 1960s. AD It's interesting that to this day, when we say "chicken," we mean the fully hand-plucked, locally-grown bird that was once bought fresh from a farmer in his or her own home, and that we fed with vegetables and grains in its lifetime. We also know that the more you treat chickens like machines, the fewer their abilities and life expectancies. They're smart, intuitive, sensitive and inquisitive, and that's reflected in their excellent taste. AD American consumers have had it with cheaply produced, processed, packaged food that is mostly the same product year after year. I am happy to say that the tide is turning, and more and more Americans are demanding meat and real food that tastes like it has a personality — even though it doesn't have a human face. I must admit, I'm a little tired of seeing "chicken" on the label of my food. When you see the word "chicken" on the side of your bag of chips, you know that those chips have been out of

presented with fever, headache, and progressive memory loss. He was treated with antibiotics and hyperbaric oxygen therapy, but his symptoms failed to improve. He developed cognitive impairment, confusion, agitation, and decreased responsiveness, and died 3 days later. His diagnosis was confirmed by the presence of tissue cysts, pseudocysts, and mycobacterial colonies on culture. With the diagnosis, we performed an autopsy to investigate the cause of death, including disease spread throughout the body. At autopsy, many cryptococcomas were detected in the basal ganglia and the posterior part of the brain. The cerebellum and brain stem also exhibited pathological changes, such as encephalitis, meningitis, perivascular cuffing, microglial nodules, and demyelination. Blood cultures were negative and no bacterial infection was detected in the cerebrospinal fluid. P. marneffei was also detected in tissues. An epidemiological survey and a retrospective study were performed in cooperation with a Thai hospital. The number of patients with clinical symptoms who were diagnosed with P. marneffei infection increased from 31.5 cases in 2005 to 97 cases in 2011. The high incidence rate of a travel-related disease due to P. marneffei highlights the importance of an epidemiological study on the distribution of P. marneffei.. Markham where he saw Christian Bertsch, the Schulenburg road superintendent and member of the American Legion, working with his sons' team in a car dealer's garage. It was a match made in heaven. The two parties got to know each other well. Bertsch had experience as a batman/driver for the U. S. Army. In '35 he turned to the automobile business and, with Christian as his right-hand man, made Schulenburg a real horseshoe town. The following year, Christian, at least, moved to New Braunfels. Were it not for some broken relationships with longtime business associates and a couple of missed appointments, I would expect Christian to remain there and I would be glad. And I would bet my bottom dollar that the family, including our dear Ema, would be there, too. The road to Hell, in the case of Schulenburg, Texas, is paved with good intentions. The Road to Hell
